Research is a boon for UCF

Funding offers special opportunities

MARCO FUNK
 Contributing Writer

UCF isn't only a big university — it's also a university with a big impact on the local economy.

More than $1 billion in research funding came to UCF during the past 11 years, benefiting students and businesses with a passion for innovation. According to M.J.

Soileau, vice president for Research and Commercialization at UCF, funding has been awarded to UCF for research projects in a wide variety of fields ranging from energy to information technology to biomedical science. The money usually comes from corporations, federal agencies and foundations. Competition for research funding is stiff. Four to five times more research proposals are submitted than are actually funded.

"It's a hypercompetitive environment; we're competing against the best in the world," Soileau said.

Despite the difficulties, the fight for funding is well worth it. According to Soileau, providing research opportunities is critical to students' suc-

Student bikes cross-country to raise green awareness

Three thousand, eight hundred miles. That's how far one UCF student rode his bicycle this summer on a trip from Tybee Island, Ga., to San Francisco to raise green awareness.

"It was a friend of mine's idea," said Michael Altfield, a senior computer science major. "I wasn't into biking at all."

Despite his lack of experience with long-distance biking, he still decided to start training for the 13-state trek.

"Most said I was crazy and said I wouldn't make it," Altfield said. "My co-workers, friends and family all took bets for when I would turn around. It gave me motivation to prove them wrong."

To train, he rode his brand new Raleigh Sojourn about 79 miles at least once a week on Little Econlockhatchee Trail in Blanchard Park for several months before the trip.

Altfield had planned to make the trip with friend Quinn Chrzan, a senior math major at Georgia Tech he had lived in a dorm with while attending Southern Polytechnic State University in Georgia.

Unfortunately, nine days into the trip, Chrzan injured his knee and was unable to continue. However, Altfield was deter-

LIFE gives seniors a chance for education

Program offers many classes

ANGELE MARAJ
 Contributing Writer

It's never too late to learn. That's the message behind a program at UCF directed at senior citizens wishing to continue their educations.

The Learning Institute for Elders is a non-profit organization for Central Floridians who are of retirement age and desire to continue learning.

"We're almost too successful," LIFE board member Roy Scherer said. "We have nearly 400 members and a current waiting list of over 100."

The program's fall semester started Aug. 24 and will end Nov. 30.

Each semester's curriculum includes a series of work shops and presentations. The categories are diverse and span several disciplines, including medical, today's military, science, literature and poetry, and history.

There are no stringent admission requirements for those wishing to participate in LIFE; all that is required is an interest in continued learning and a $100 tuition payment for the year. There are waivers available for

O-Team highlights UCF's welcome wagon

NICOLE MILLER
 Contributing Writer

The Orientation Team, better known as the O-Team, is looking for new members to join their team of diverse and dedicated students for upcoming 2011 orientations.

"Interviewers are looking for people who can work with a team, but who can also stand out and bring something special to the team," former O-Team member Joshua Wallace said.

The O-Team was created to help facilitate incoming freshmen, transfers and family by welcoming them to the UCF campus life.

For Alex Pratt, a student orientation coordinator, orientation was intimidating, but he said the O-Team made his experience at UCF more enjoyable.

"O-Team is an experience that changes you for the better in all parts of your life," Pratt said. "It gives you connections with both faculty and students and increases your school spirit."

Being a part of the O-Team is time-consuming and requires a lot of com-

Miami-Dade court finds no basis for ban on gay adoption

The ruling by the 3rd District Court of Appeal upholds a 2008 decision by a Miami-Dade County judge who found "no rational basis" for the ban when she approved the adoption of two young brothers by Martin Gill and his male partner.

The prohibition was first enacted in 1977 and is the only law of its kind in the nation, according to court records.

Principal Shannon McClutcheon told WKMG TV in Orlando that the girls only wiped the toilet seats to get rid of some of the cleaning fluid that spilled, and that the unconventional punishment came after other options failed.

McClutcheon says parents will be notified before a punishment like this is issued again.

Biking plans for next summer in the works

mined and decided to finish what he started, with or without a companion.

Altfield's parents were proud of his drive and his goals but concerned about his well-being when they found out Chrzan would not be accompanying him.

"I was concerned about his safety more than anything else," said his dad, Allen Altfield. "When Quinn turned around, he was solo, so that made me even more nervous for his safety."

Altfield joined up with a group of bikers, which helped put his family at ease.

It was when he was making his way through Kansas that he met 25 other cyclists who were riding to San Francisco, which is where he was also planning on finishing the trip.

The cyclists were part of "Bike the US for MS," an organization that goes on bike trips to raise awareness for multiple sclerosis research.

Altfield kept up with them the remainder of the trip by actually riding ahead of the group. He carried along almost 90 pounds of extra weight while the others had their equipment inside an RV that traveled cross-country with them.

Having the company of cyclists who were familiar with the activity worked in Altfield's favor, especially in the Rocky Mountains, where he realized he wasn't fully prepared.

The cyclists showed him what changes to make including wearing fleece spandex, synthetic wool socks and polyester shirts instead of cotton to keep him warm.

He also traded in his flat Chuck Taylor Converse sneakers for Shimano Pedaling Dynamics biking shoes that clip onto the pedals.

The Rockies were not the only set of mountains that forced Altfield to overcome an obstacle.

The Appalachian Mountain desert created a seemingly impossible environment to conquer.

"It was the longest day," said Altfield, who underestimated how much water he needed.

"I went into panic mode," he said. "I thought I was going to die. It was probably the scariest day."

He rode 50 miles that day uphill in the 109-degree desert sun.

"I thought he was totally crazy," said friend Patti AuBuchon, a senior civil engineering major. "I was worried he wasn't going to make it. I was happy when he did."

After 70 days of motels, showering with his clothes on, limited cell phone service, tire changes, a tire rotation, $4,000, enduring extreme temperature changes, almost getting run over by truckers, losing his wallet at the bottom of an 11,321-foot mountain, hitchhiking to bike shops, leaving navigation up to guess work as well as temporarily exchanging his vegan diet to vegetarian all while promoting green energy, he still wanted to ride.

"I was sad," Altfield said. "I wasn't ready to go back to my old life. It just seemed kind of boring."

He said he liked being able to put everything else on hold and just enjoy nature.

"I can't wait to go again," Altfield said. "Seventy days is too short."

In fact, he already has his next trip lined up.

He plans to travel from Massachusetts to Washington and is interested in getting a group from Orlando together to join him.

"It's an opportunity to see the country," Allen Altfield said. "You can't see it from an airplane going from some place to another."

Aside from the experience, it's good for the planet too. Altfield's focus was to promote green energy by sticking to his vegan diet, lake clean-ups, recycling and riding his bike just about everywhere.

If you're interested in biking next summer from Massachusetts to Washington while spreading awareness for multiple sclerosis research, contact Altfield at Michael@2guvs1biketrip.com.

Senior Michael Altfield says he is eager to get another cross-country biking trip underway.

UCF fourth in state for research funds received

FROM A1

cess. It also helps local technology businesses and the local economy.

Daniel Rini, president of RINI Technologies, knows the benefits of university research very well. A UCF alumnus whose bachelor's, master's and Ph.D. degrees in Mechanical Engineering are all from UCF, Rini started his own business after gaining valuable research experience on campus.

"I was able to start the company and win contracts from the military on Day One, because I had just spent years at UCF learning how to write proposals to win research dollars," he said.

Local businesses like RINI Technologies gain from UCF's funded research projects in many more ways.

New inventions are frequently developed in campus research labs, and the local business community is often the first to hear about them.

Due to its research capability, UCF is also in a position to assist companies with product development.

According to Rini, businesses like his sometimes turn to the university for help, contracting researchers on campus to solve a specific problem.

Perhaps the most direct advantage of university research for both technology businesses and students is the educational aspect.

Research increases the quality of education, giving students real world experience they'll need in order to get hired after graduation, according to Rini.

"You not only learn how to take classes and get A's on tests," Rini said. "You learn how to write research proposals, get funded, develop some new technology or product and make it work."

Local companies like RINI Technologies need people with these valuable skills, and usually look for them at UCF first.

The combined impact of local companies finding skilled workers and UCF graduates staying in Central Florida can give the local economy a huge boost.

Antonio Rodriguez, a senior statistics major, knows to value his recent research experience.

He participated in an undergraduate research program in computer vision at UCF this summer, developing image-recognition software.

Being a part of a research project which included graduate as well as undergraduate students was very useful, according to Rodriguez.

"It felt like I was part of a real research team; it was kind of like an internship," he said.

Rodriguez will be graduating soon and intends to highlight his research experience on graduate school applications.

Despite UCF's large student population, UCF still falls behind three other Florida universities in the amount of research money it receives, according to Soileau.

But UCF is getting three to four times more research money now than it was 10 years ago.

Rodriguez highly recommends applying for a research opportunity, despite the intense competition.

Everyone should try to get some research experience in college, "as long as they can handle the crazy math jargon that gets thrown around every day," he said.

O-Team experience lasts

FROM A1

mitment.

"My life during the summer was being an O-Teamer," Wallace said.

But O-Teamers' duties extend beyond the start of the summer; once January arrives, members have a loaded schedule.

At the beginning of the spring semester, members attend the Southern Regional Orientation Workshop conference, where they interact with a multitude of different orientation teams from different universities and learn details about orientation.

O-Teamers are also required to take a two-credit leadership development course in the spring where they are educated about leadership, diversity and interpersonal communication.

At the end of the spring semester there is a

GPA review, in which members will have to have maintain the minimum of a 2.7 GPA.

In addition, there is a two-week training period when O-Teamers are given presentations about the resource offices that UCF has to offer, learn the process of orientation and work on their dance and diversity skit routines that O-Teamers perform for incoming students.

During the summer, members are responsible for performing nightly duties, where they spend time with the incoming students before the first day of orientation, guiding students through the UCF campus, explaining UCF's resource offices and informing students what they should expect while being at UCF through their diversity skit.

"For me, the best thing during orientation is the diversity skit, because it shows students different situations that students usually wouldn't see in high school but will definitely see during college," former O-Teamer Kevin Siesel said.

While being an O-Teamer, members gain numerous benefits, which include learning more about the campus, as well as yourself and being able to provide that first friend to incoming students.

"Thanks to the O-Team, I see the world through different eyes, and I will carry this experience with me for the rest of my life," Siesel said.

Students who are interested in applying are required to fill out an application, which can be found on the O-Team's website, fye.sdes.ucf.edu/oteam, or in their office located in Howard Phillips Hall Suite 218.

In addition to the application, students are expected to submit a resume, obtain two letters of recommendation, one from a UCF faculty member, and write three essays.

Once applications have been received, students will sign up for a group interview. If selected to continue, students then sign up for two individual interviews.

Applications will be available starting Friday and will be due Oct. 22 by 5 p.m.

Information sessions will be held in the Student Union on Oct. 5 and Oct. 19. New members will be announced by Nov. 29.

For more information about the O-Team, e-mail them at info@ucfoteam.com or call (407) 823-5105 and ask to speak with one of the Student Orientation Coordinators.

those unable to pay the tuition fee due to financial hardship, but they are not requested very often.

This university is not the first establishment to develop such an opportunity.

The Senior Resource Alliance lists LIFE among 22 other programs for lifelong learning in the Central Florida area.

However, LIFE is the only such program in Central Florida run at a major university that allows participants most of the same privileges as any other student.

The program, sponsored by the Office of Undergraduate Studies and the Interdisciplinary Studies Program, offers members many of the same perks that regular students have, including student ID cards, use of the library and computer labs, parking, discount tickets to on-campus shows and events, and student admittance to sporting events.

LIFE, now in its 20th year, started because of the efforts of Dick Tucker, a now retired psychologist at UCF.

Applicants are accepted on a first-come, first-served basis, so the earlier hopeful students apply, the better chance they have of getting in sooner. Generally, about 50 people are admitted to the program each year.

Fellow board member Betty Ingham confirmed that the largest problem is getting through to all of the people.

"People call me begging to be admitted," she said. "But there's little we can do."

However, she and other board member Dee Burke said they are grateful for what the university is able to provide to LIFE.

"On the plus side, the Student Union goes beyond the call of duty, and of course we have to thank [President] Hitt," Burke said. "The university's close participation is what makes the program so unique."

Martha Hitt, President John Hitt's wife, is an ex-officio member of the 2010-11 LIFE executive board.

LIFE members also enjoy interacting with other UCF students.

"The kids at this university are the best," Burke said. "They're very pleasant, very helpful."

"We interact with the [general student population] really well," Ingham said, who agreed that the relationship was reciprocal.

Members will often gladly help other students with surveys and projects that require data and enjoy being a part of student life.

"We get the same lectures the students do," Burke said with a laugh, "but none of the tests."

LIFE meets in the Pegasus Ballroom every Tuesday at 9:30 a.m.

Twins clinch postseason berth, Liriano named No. 1

MINNEAPOLIS — Francisco Liriano will get the start when Minnesota opens the AL playoffs next month, "He's been winging it pretty good," manager Ron Gardenhire said before Wednesday's game against Cleveland. Liriano is 14-8 with a 3.44 ERA in 29 starts, including 6-1 in his past 10. The left-hander will have six days' rest between his final regular season and first playoff starts.

Minnesota clinched its second straight AL Central title — and sixth in nine years — late Tuesday. Unlike last year, when Minnesota a tiebreaker playoff to win the division, the Twins can set up their rotation.

Carl Pavano is scheduled to pitch Game 2 followed by Brian Duensing. Nick Blackburn will be the fourth starter if the Twins use a four-man rotation.

Steelers' Dixon out Sunday; Bucs to face Batch or Leftwich

PITTSBURGH — The Steelers' starting quarterback Sunday at Tampa Bay will be a player who was cut last weekend or another who was all but ignored during training camp.

No matter, coach Mike Tomlin said, either Byron Leftwich or Charlie Batch will be expected to play well enough to win until Ben Roethlisberger returns from his four-game suspension.

The Steelers' once quarterback-heavy roster thinned out even more Tuesday when Dennis Dixon was lost indefinitely with a torn meniscus in his left knee. Dixon is expected to have surgery Wednesday and could go on the injured reserve list, which would end his season after two starts — and two victories.

Dixon's injury turned out to be more serious than suspected on Sunday, when Tomlin said he could have re-entered a 19-11 victory at Tennessee to hand the ball off if necessary.

Dixon was hurt while scrambling for 21 yards late in the first quarter. He stayed in for two more plays, including an 8-yard run, then was lifted on the next possession and didn't return.

"He planted his leg in the ground and cut inside, and said it felt a little unstable at that point," Tomlin said Tuesday. "Adrenaline and things of that nature, particularly when it's a nonimpact injury, it takes a while before you realize that something's amiss."

The fear of exposing Dixon to injury while running was one reason he was limited him to only a couple of carries in the season-opening 15-9 victory over Atlanta.

Because Leftwich still was recovering from a sprained medial collateral ligament in his left knee — he was cut Saturday to free up a roster spot, then returned on Monday — Batch played the final three quarters at Tennessee. It was Batch's first extensive game action since 2007.

Batch was the No. 4 quarterback during voluntary workouts and training camp and received almost no work with the starters before playing against Tennessee. If Leftwich hadn't gotten hurt in the final exhibition game Sept. 2, Batch might have been cut.

Running game on both sides will be key vs. Kansas State

CARLOS PINEDA

The Knights hit the road again this weekend, traveling 1,380 miles to battle against the Big 12's Kansas State.

UCF's (2-1) trip to Manhattan, Kansas, on Saturday sets up its first meeting against the Wildcats (3-0).

For the first time this season, the Knights will kickoff at 12:30 p.m.

UCF head coach George O'Leary welcomes the change of pace, preferring the day games to night games.

"I love day games," he said. "I love getting up, talking to the team and going to play. I think the worst thing in college football is hanging around the hotel all day Saturday. That is hard on the players and coaches."

O'Leary said the benefits of day games are the players getting an extra half-day to rest.

In last week's game against Buffalo, the Knights relied on the run-game late to escape with a 24-10 win.

Although redshirt junior Ronnie Weaver is listed at third on the depth chart, he was instrumental for the Knights against the Bulls. Weaver scored on carries of 14 yards and 1 yard to clinch the team's first 2010 road victory.

Developing a running game was tough in the first half for UCF, but O'Leary said the offense started running better in the second half.

"In the first half, we didn't hit the hole like we should have. Ronnie Weaver and Brendan Kelly ran extremely well," he said. "They were downhill running and doing a lot of things that you expect the running backs to do."

On the other side of the ball, the

Eason's honors highlight early-season title

MIKE BALDUCCI

If Greg Eason is any indication of the Knights' new recruiting class, UCF looks to be in pretty good shape.

Eason, the freshman from Leicestershire, England, led the Knights to a title in the Adams Cup of Newport on Tuesday. The team's win came in just the second tournament of the season. Eason won the individual title with a 2-under 214.

The Knights (4-over 868) finished with a sizable 14-stroke lead over second-place West Florida. The 36-mile per hour winds were easy to handle for the England native, and his wind gives him team exemptions for the rest of the fall season.

"Second college start and he's already won a golf tournament," head coach Bryce Wallor said. "We played in extremely high wind conditions ... and it was certainly a perfect golf course for someone with his background."

Senior Nuno Henriques tied for fourth with sophomore Reid Martin, posting a 3-over.

Wallor previously said Henriques had a potential semester-ending injury, but Henriques was able to compete, making it his first match of the season.

The Rhode Island trip was a return for Wallor, who competed at the University of Rhode Island as part of the Ram's golf team from 1993-98.

Junior Connor Arendell continued his strong year with a 17th-place finish, coming off a title last week at the Wolf Run Intercollegiate in Zionsville, Ind.

Vilde hopes to bring a little bit of Fla. to Latvia

SEAN SIMON
Volleyball beat writer

Making the transition from a capital city to Orlando isn't uncommon on the volleyball team. Brittanie Wallace made the move from Austin, Texas. Dani Harrison moved from Tallahassee. Nichole Reidel is from Denver.

Evija Vilde, however, transferred from the capital of Latvia.

Not quite the same transition issues as her teammates.

Hailing from Riga, the 6-foot-1-inch sophomore hit the ground running from the start.

When she arrived in Orlando for school, it was only her second visit to the United States. She had to quickly adjust to her new team, home and language with only a few weeks of practice before the start of last season.

Despite being fluent in six languages, Vilde's English was rusty. She learned fast, as her outgoing personality and humor was always leading to her asking questions and discussing culture with teammates.

On the court, Vilde flourished and was named a season opener starter. She recorded 10 kills, five digs, and four block assists and hasn't looked back. The outside-hitter was one of four Knights to play in all 30 matches last season.

Originally a tennis player, the southpaw decided she wanted to try team sports in high school. Her father, Raimonds, an Olympic volleyball silver medalist and coach, convinced her to try volleyball and continues to be her mentor.

"He was always coming to my games, would tell me what I did wrong and how to improve myself," Vilde said. "I can call him on Skype and talk about volleyball to calm me down."

Vilde is studying hospitality management and says the strong program at UCF is part of the reason she chose the school. Her interests in the area of tourism were sparked by her love of traveling and a desire to bring friendlier service back home.

"The people here are all so friendly and even strangers say hello," said

Vilde. "In Latvia we don't say 'hi' if we don't know each other because they would look at you really awkward."

Before matches Vilde prepares herself with tunes and hair tying.

"I listen to music to pump myself up, but the girls don't like it because it's dance and techno music," said Vilde. "It's very popular in Europe and I like to listen to techno remixes of popular songs before games."

Vilde also ensures that her hair stay up in a bun or braided for good luck.

Vilde is one of only two Knights who have played in every set this season. She is currently second in team kills, ranked at No. 16 in Conference USA. She has also been named to two all-tournament teams this season.

When asked if there was something she could bring from Florida to Latvia, Vilde paused to think before answering with a smile. "Free refills, palm trees, and warm weather because we don't have any of those," said Vilde. "Flori-

Nall earns C-USA Defensive honors

Coming off a career game against Buffalo, defensive end Darius Nall was named Conference USA Defensive Player of the Week.

The junior racked up nine tackles — three for a loss — and had two sacks in the Knights' 24-10 win over the Bulls, Saturday.

Nall also created a hurry that led to defensive end Bruce Miller's interception.

Nall now has 15 tackles and three sacks for the year. His feats have led the Knights to Top 20 spots in total defense, scoring defense, passing defense and passing efficiency defense.

His play will be crucial in containing Kansas

State's running game, Saturday.

Pre-game festivities highlight Knights vs. Blazers next week

Before Wednesday's nationally televised against UAB, Remove Before Flight will perform outside Bright House Networks Stadium.

The band, known for their UCF-themed "KnightMare," will begin at 6 p.m., following a pep rally and wing-eating contest at IOA Plaza.

Reis, Jewell earn C-USA Player of the Week titles

Junior goalkeeper Aline Reis was named Conference USA Defensive Player of the Week, and sophomore forward Tishia

Jewell was given Offensive honors.

This is Reis' sixth time being named the Defensive Player of the Week and Jewell's first Offensive Player of the Week award. Jewell was also named to TopDrawerSoccer.com's National Team of the Week, which makes her the fourth Knight named to the team in two years.

Reis had 14 saves in the Arizona Tournament and made four in overtime vs. Arizona.

Jewell racked up give points against Arizona State. She also scored two goals and an assist against the Sun Devils.

The Knights will open C-USA play Friday vs. East Carolina at 7 p.m. at home.

The Knights' next tournament is Oct. 10 at the Prestige in PGA WEST in California. The Knights will face off against USC, Stanford, Washington and Long Beach State as well as other top West Coast programs.

UCF's most prestigious event of the fall season, however, is at the Isleworth Collegiate Invitational on Oct. 24-26 in nearby Windermere.

The Invite, hosted by Texas Tech, includes top-tier programs Stanford, Arizona, Texas, LSU, Tennessee, Oklahoma State, Florida and other Big 10 and SEC studs.

Junior Connor Arendell continued his strong 2010 year with a top-20 finish at the Adams Cup of Newport.

Thomas spearheads run-heavy Wildcats

FROM A6

Knights defense will have a tough task in containing Wildcats running back Daniel Thomas. Through three games, the senior has rushed for 552 yards and six touchdowns.

"It's going to be a good challenge," said redshirt junior defensive end Darius Nall, who was named the Conference USA Defensive Player of the Week. "We're looking forward to it."

Last week against Iowa State, the Kansas State offense threw the ball 12 times, while the running game racked up 50 combined touches, with Thomas carrying the ball a career-high 34 times for 181 yards.

Thomas averages 184 yards per game on the ground. He will go up against a UCF defense that has given up 128.7 rushing yards per game in 2010.

"He is very good, and they do a great job blocking for him," O'Leary said of Thomas. "He is a tough runner. I hope he is not going to be a lot of fun to watch. We have to close and wrap up on tackles."

GET YOUR FACTS STRAIGHT

RUNNING AROUND

The Wildcats have rushed at least 50 times in two of their three games this season.

QUALITY UNDER CENTER

Kansas State senior quarterback Carson Coffman, who was a backup his three previous years, has completed nearly 65 percent of his passes and thrown four touchdowns in 2010.

GOOD DECISION

The Wildcats are happy they didn't stick running back Daniel Thomas at his original position: quarterback. After Thomas, who was a QB at Northwest Mississippi Community College, transferred to Division I, head coach Bill Snyder noted Thomas' weak arm and stuck him at RB and never looked back.

ROUGH ROAD AHEAD

If the Knights deliver the way they hope, the next three weeks could pose a tough challenge for the Wildcats. After the UCF game, Kansas State will get a visit from No. 6 Nebraska, then head to Lawrence to play Kansas. Two weeks later, they get Oklahoma State at home.

What I see is every team missing a lot of tackles because of his ability."

When the Wildcats do pass the ball, they go to Brodrick Smith, who already has three touchdowns on the year.

Thomas, No. 8, is mirrored on the other side of the ball by another No. 8: Stephen Harrison. Harrison ranks in the top 10 in the Big 12 in passes defended.

The Wildcats' defense, which usually runs a zone, doesn't blitz often and mostly rushes four. Their line does give up 176 yards per game on the ground, which could be a sight for sore eyes considering the Knights' recent running back troubles.

Alex Hrebeck, a junior, leads the team in tackles, and, combined with Prizell Brown, is part of a formidable front seven.

The game in the Little Apple concludes the non-conference portion of the schedule for the Knights.

The AIDS memorial quilt was created by Jack Mackenroth's Living Positive by Design booth at the USCA, which offered people the opportunity to design and craft their own fabric panel about what HIV means to them.

Former 'Project Runway' star featured at 2010 U.S. Aids Conference in Orlando

KAITLYN TEABO
Contributing Writer

Being HIV positive is never what someone wants to hear, but Jack Mackenroth, 41, has been living with HIV for 20 years.

Mackenroth, along with many others, shared his experience at the 2010 United States Conference on AIDS held in Orlando on Sept. 12-15 to raise awareness of the help available to people living with HIV.

Mackenroth is most widely known for his short appearance on the hit reality television show Project Runway. He only competed in a few episodes before deciding to withdraw from the competition due to a contagious staph infection.

Mackenroth is also a notable menswear designer, model and swimmer who is quickly becoming an active role model for those living with HIV.

Diagnosed in 1990, Mackenroth has been trying to reach out to those affected by HIV as opposed to speaking about HIV prevention.

"People just don't like to talk about it," Mackenroth said. "There is a lot of information on prevention and testing, which is great, but what do you say to the people living with HIV?"

In an effort to break the silence, Mackenroth partnered with Merck & Co. to create an educational program on HIV/AIDS called Living Positive By Design.

"The goal of 'Living' is really to combat the stigma of HIV," Mackenroth said. The name for the campaign came from Mackenroth's open voice about his disease on Project Runway.

"I am not ashamed or embarrassed and really look forward to being a role model," he said.

Mackenroth held a Living Positive By Design booth at the 2010 USCA where people could design and craft their own fabric panel about what HIV means to them. The panels will later be joined together to create an AIDS Memorial quilt.

"We had a really special booth this year, it was interactive, where a lot of them are just educational," Mackenroth said.

The National Minority AIDS Council — the official sponsor of the USCA — puts on the conference each year in collaboration with a local host committee.

According to NMAC Executive Director Paul Kawata, the U.S. Conference on AIDS is the largest AIDS-related gathering in the U.S., bringing together more than 3,000 workers from different members from the HIV/AIDS advocate community to build national support networks, exchange the latest information and learn cutting-edge tools to address the challenges of HIV/AIDS.

The 2010 USCA specifically targeted the nation's youth.

"The need to address the impact of HIV/AIDS on young people, and young people of color, has never been greater, as 13 per-

Gossip: It can make or break you in high school.

High school gossip mostly consists of two things: Either what someone has said about someone, or who is having sex with whom. In Olive Penderghast's case, her sex life is what her classmates are gossiping about behind her back, even though Olive has no sex life. Easy A gets put toward the top of the class because it benefits from strong dialogue, an Oscar-nominated supporting cast and a sense of self-awareness not often seen in typical high school comedies.

Easy A is about Olive, played by Emma Stone (Zombieland), a girl that is unnoticed by her school's social hierarchy until rumors spread that she lost her virginity to a kid in community college.

But it's all a lie. Olive made up the story to explain to her best friend why she didn't want to go camping with her and her nudist parents.

Unfortunately, the school's student Christian authority figure (Amanda Byers) hears this in the bathroom, spreads the rumor and turns Olive's adultery into her new cause.

Olive instantly becomes noticed, then infamous, when she stages having sex with a gay friend to make him look straight, thus ending his harassment.

This also ties into their class reading The Scarlet Letter, and Olive is the new Hester Prynne, even sewing a scarlet "A" on her clothes.

Scarlet A's may not be typical in modern day high school, but how quickly rumors spread in the Facebook-era is spot on. In a matter of minutes, the whole school knows the latest news. But often the news gets altered, just like a giant game of telephone back in kindergarten.

What is refreshing about the film is that it knows it's a high school drama much in the 80's style of John Hughes. There are several Hughes references throughout the film and even a few jokes about how the story plays out.

Stone's performance is magnified by the presence of three Oscar-nominated actors: Stanley Tucci, Patricia Clarkson and Thomas Haden Church.

While they help the story overall, Tucci and Clarkson's roles as Olive's parents feel unrealistic. They sometimes come off more as older friends than parents.

But this can be ignored when there are so many good things going on in this film.

Easy A is accessible and enjoyable for everyone in a genre that can be often one-dimensional.

STUDENT GOVERNMENT ASSOCIATION

Democracy is viable at UCF

I have been going to UCF for a year now. While it has been my pleasure to be a part of the student community, I've seen much that is wrong with how UCF is run.

Although there are now more than 53,000 students attending UCF, they have virtually no say in how their campus and classes are administered.

When students do speak out, the administration routinely ignores their concerns.

Even when students have massed to push measures through an all too obstinate student government, they have more often than not found their voices stonewalled or simply overruled at the whim of a handful of overpaid administrators.

Even in the few domains that students theoretically have control of, the administration holds the right to overrule their decisions, making student governance an obscene mockery of petty personal politics and pizza-fueled elections.

I'm sure many of you wonder why you should care about this.

It's not just because of the very real concerns of how much you should pay to go to classes, to park on campus, and whether your campus organization can effectively build upon your classroom experiences.

THOMAS HELLINGER
SGA Senate Candidate

UCF is a small municipality unto itself.

Furthermore, it is a community of those just starting their careers and adjusting to the wider world as citizens.

Our experiences here will develop our world views. What we are being taught is to have a jaded and distrustful attitude towards our ability to build democratic governance.

We are being taught that corporate speech is more important than our speech, that we are too incompetent to handle democratic responsibility and that the labor of a community is to be exploited by those with wealth and power, rather than used to enrich the community that struggled to develop that wealth in the first place.

This kind of world that is being dictated to us is not the world I want to live in.

I want to prove that we can build a society where democracy is not an empty platitude but a real and viable way of life.

I believe that we can do this, not with hyperbolic rhetoric or partisan ax-grinding, but with the burning energy and idealism of youth.

Even while I have witnessed the childish drama of student government, I have also seen Democrats and Republicans be friendly and disagree peacefully.

I have seen our Student Government Association nearly unanimously declare that bigotry against transsexuals is unconditionally wrong. I have even witnessed communists and libertarians agree on substantive issues.

In short, I have seen more adult-like behavior from "kids," than I have seen from supposed adults like Keith Olbermann and Glenn Beck. I can't see why we can't be relied upon to build a better UCF when our behavior outshines that of some of the most influential Americans.

Remember this on Monday, when you see the inevitable pizza-based bribery and infantile plots to damage the campaigns of rivals. You have an opportunity to change this and to build an alma mater that you can be proud to call your own.

Thomas Adriaan Hellinger is running for College of Computer Science and Engineering Senate Seat 4.

NATE BEELER / THE WASHINGTON EXAMINER

Distracted driving reason for road rage

Cars tailgating, headlights flashing, middle fingers flying, foul words. If this doesn't paint the scene of road rage, then I don't know what does.

The issue of road rage is becoming a major one, especially in Florida.

In a July article, it was stated that Florida drivers (drivers in Miami in particular) had the dubious "honor" recently bestowed upon them in the road rage survey by AutoVantage, naming South Florida the road rage capital of the U.S. for three of the past four years.

Now what does that say about the people of South Florida? Nothing good, that's for sure.

I don't really want to take a side on this issue because quite frankly both parties are in the wrong.

Those displaying road rage shouldn't be going to the extent that they are because they can't contain their anger. And those who are causing others to be enraged on the road shouldn't be texting and eating while driving, or whatever else they do to distract themselves from doing anything but driving, that results in upsetting the motorists around them.

To put an end to this "road rage capital" streak that has taken over the reputation of South Florida, change will be required from both parties.

Drivers who text and try to operate their vehicle at the same time: Stop. It is impossible for someone to simultaneously pay attention to the road and the cars around them while texting. End of story.

Drivers who are so extremely hungry that they must eat in their cars, stop. There is no excuse for eating while driving. If you forgot to eat before work or class, then that's your fault. Don't put other drivers' lives at risk by trying to stuff a Big Mac down your throat or get that last spoonful of frosty out of your cup.

Drivers who can't decide on a radio station, give it up already. What song is playing over your car speakers should be the least of your worries. Don't let seeking through the stations or a CD be the cause of a traffic accident.

Drivers who don't use their turn signals: Start. Is it really that physically demanding to push the turn signal lever up or down? When drivers don't use their signal and all of a sudden slam on their breaks to turn, not only is it upsetting to the driver behind them, it's also an easy way to get rear-ended. Not many people follow the two-second rule, so put on that blinker or be prepared to leave your car in the shop for reconstructive surgery of the back end in the near future.

And for those whose blood starts to boil after noticing one of the previously described drivers on the street: Hold back that anger. It's not worth sky-rocketing your blood pressure over the careless actions of other drivers. It's also not good to get so upset with someone on the road that you yell threats at them or even get out of your car in the middle of the road to confront them.

I know it's easier said than done to just ignore the fact that someone almost ran you off the road because they were texting, but try. People don't need to be threatening one another on our roads.

So drivers, to put it simply, stop practicing distracted driving, use your turn signals and don't lose your temper over a fellow motorist's poor driving habits. It's time Florida dropped its road rage reputation once and for all.

OUR STANCE

Temper your pride in UCF

In the Sept. 3 issue of The Chronicle Review, a weekly magazine from The Chronicle of Higher Education, Hollis Robbins explores the idea of obsessing over one's alma mater.

She approaches the topic from the perspective of someone who has dated a man obsessed with his alma mater.

We approach the topic as student journalists who will spend a large portion of their time questioning the decisions made by the university they attend.

We feel it is healthy to question and critique your school, as students and as alumni, for multiple reasons.

Blind love and appreciation for anything is a dangerous game. How are you to hone your critical thinking skills if you don't practice them?

Using these skills will help you dissect the world outside of UCF that you'll eventually have to navigate, which will probably include political scandals, confusing mortgages and demanding bosses.

Also, everyone benefits from a dose of healthy criticism, including a university.

Understanding what does and does not work will help UCF continue ranking as one of the best national universities on the prestigious list from U.S. News &

World Report.

An unyielding love for your university could eliminate the chance that you connect with members outside of your alma mater, too.

Robbins addresses this predicament in her column asking, "What about those members of our society shut out from the four-year-college experience? What about community colleges and commuter schools? What about night-school or returning or international students?"

Being able to appreciate all types of individuals is important.

Perhaps the most critical aspect of the how much school spirit is too much concept is the attention it takes away from the main goal of college, which is to educate its students. One of the main goals of large universities is to make money.

As a student, though, your main objective should be learning as much as possible while attending college.

Understanding the important concepts of your field will matter more than how many football games you went to as a student.

There are some positive outcomes from devotion to your college.

You'll likely be happier on campus if you love your school, which would also make you more enjoyable to be around in classes and at social events.

A naturally sunny disposition could help you make more friends and future contacts, which are necessary in a world that values networking.

Networking is a crucial step in securing a job in our society today. Becoming an active member of your alumni association could provide meet-and-greet opportunities.

It would allow you to network with professionals that you might not run into on a daily basis.

Just make sure not to alienate yourself while meeting others.

You should avoid being like the main character in Robbins' column, who is a man so obsessed with his alma mater he was unable to connect with anyone who did not attend Harvard.

His obsession lead to the end of his first marriage and cost him his relationship with the author.

We aren't saying you should hold rallies on all of the things you hate about UCF. That isn't likely to win you friends or future job contacts.

It is a good idea to keep an open mind about your alma mater, though, since UCF, like all of us, isn't perfect.
